The first forest library in Shanghai recently opened in public. Known as Read & Joy Forest, the library was jointly founded by Pu dong New Area and Shanghai Library. It is located in an urban wood covering an area of 20,546 square meters.

The design of forest library allows an environment-friendly principle--ensuring minimum disturbance to nature. In the library existing green spaces are connected by wooden walkways.

The library is in open air and equipped with facilities such as benches and an information booth. Visitors can read and relax in a natural environment. They can take a pleasant walk in the quiet and verdant forest, which includes Camphor, Cedar and Osmanthus trees.

"I learnt about the forest library from my friends, so I came here," said a 21-year-old college student, Mr Wang. "The green outdoor environment helps reduce eyestrain. I will come back for sure."

Having a library in a wood is an extension of reading in doors according to Xu Qiang who works in Shanghai Library. "It offers a different reading experience to readers", he added.

Most of the visitors to the forest library are young people and parents with kids. They are really impressed by the fresh air and the green. They can either immerse themselves in reading or take leisurely strolls in the forest. Since most of the time they stay in doors, this special library makes it possible for them to get close to nature surroundings. They feel really relaxed there.

6. The environment-friendly principle focuses on ____.

- A. increasing green spaces
- B. making the least change to nature
- C. reducing disturbance to readers
- D. creating a relaxing indoor environment

7. What do we know about "Osmanthus" in paragraph 3? ()

- A. It is a plant.
- B. It is a path.
- C. It is a bench
- D. It is a device.

8. What does Xu Qiang think of the forest library? ()

- A. It appeals a lot to parents and kids.
- B. It provides a new reading experience.
- C. It enlarges the indoor reading space.
- D. It helps reduce reader's eyestrain.

9. The forest library is special because it _____.

- A. offers people a chance to read in nature
- B. attracts a large number of readers
- C. has support from the local government
- D. covers a large area of forest

10. Where is this passage most likely from? ()

- A. A diary
- B. A handbook
- C. A newspaper
- D. A novel

C

Since the first kindergarten opened in 1837, kindergarten has been a place for telling stories, building castles, drawing pictures, and learning to share. But today, children are spending more time in kindergartens working out math problems and memorizing words. In short, kindergartens are becoming more like schools.

In my mind, exactly the opposite is needed. Instead of making kindergartens like schools, we need to make schools more like kindergartens.

As I see it, the kindergarten approach to learning is ideally suited to the core need of the 21st century--the ability to think creatively. Unfortunately, most schools are out of step with today's need: they are not designed to help students develop as creative thinkers. But kindergartens, at least those remain true to the kindergarten tradition, do things differently.

What do I mean by the kindergarten approach to learning? In traditional kindergartens, children are constantly designing, creating, experimenting, and exploring. Two children are building towers with wooden blocks. A classmate sees the towers and starts pushing his toy car between them. But the towers are too close together, so the children start moving the towers further apart to make room for the car. In the process one of the towers falls down. After a brief argument over who is at fault, they start talking about how to build a taller and stronger tower. Seeing this, the teacher shows them pictures of real world-tall buildings and the children notice that the bottoms of the buildings are wider than the tops. So they decide to rebuild their block tower with a wider base than before. This type of process is repeated over and over in kindergarten. The materials vary and the creations vary, but the core process is the same. In going through this process, kindergarten children develop and improve their abilities as creative thinkers. They learn to develop their own ideas, try them out, test the boundaries, experiment with alternatives, get input from others--and perhaps most significantly, generate new ideas based on their experiences. The kindergarten approach to learning is well-matched to the core need of the current society, and should be extended to learners of all ages. alternatives, get input from others--and perhaps most significantly, generate new ideas based on their experiences. The kindergarten approach to learning is well-matched to the core need of the current society, and should be extended to learners of all ages.

11. According to paragraph 1, modern-day kindergartens spent more time _____.

- A. encouraging children express themselves
- B. engaging children in creative activities
- C. teaching children school knowledge
- D. telling children to share with others

12. What does the underline sentence in paragraph 2 imply? ()

- A. More high quality kindergartens are needed
- B. The kindergarten approach is more innovative
- C. Schools should adopt the kindergarten approach
- D. Schools should set an example for kindergartens

13. The kindergarten approach helps children to ____.

- A. think creatively
- B. build towers quickly
- C. handle arguments properly
- D. memorize words efficiently

14. The teacher shows the picture of tall buildings to ____.

- A. help the children to develop better cooperation
- B. provide materials for building block towers
- C. prevent the block tower from falling down
- D. inspire the children to observe and explore

15. What is the purpose of this passage? ()

- A. To help kindergartens to build school
- B. To promote the kindergarten approach
- C. To advise school to invest in kindergartens
- D. To start the reform of traditional kindergartens

阅读下面短文, 从短文后的选项中选出可以填入空白处的最佳选项。每个选项只能用一次。

When you type the phrase “information overload” into a search engine, you will immediately get an information overload more than 7 million hits in 0.05 seconds. 16 For example, you learn that phrase “information overload” was first used in 1970, before the Internet was invented. But much of the information is irrelevant or useless. 17

18 Every day, there are news and sports websites to watch, emails that need to be answered and people who want to chat with you online. Back in the real world, friends, family, and colleagues also have things to tell you.

19 A recent survey has shown that many employees believe that it has made their jobs less satisfying and has even affected their personal relationships outside work. 20 Dealing with the overloaded information, they sit in front of their computers for hours before they know it. So they cannot find time to do exercise or get enough time for quality sleep.

- A. Some of the information is useful.
- B. Information overload is everywhere in our life.
- C. Reading such information is a pure waste of time.
- D. Some of them also think that it is bad for their health
- E. At work, information overload is causing some problems.

There's a lot to deal with when you go off to university. The school work is just the 21. There are new friends to 22, new opportunities to seize, new responsibilities to take ...and, for most students, a completely new city to 23.

We recently 24 our daughter Ella 150 miles to start her college life. It was a 25 to find a car park that day. Even worse, we had greater trouble finding her room.

We had taken her to the local supermarket before we left, though we knew that she had roommates and phone apps to give her 26. But a bigger challenge ahead was clear--to find her 27 in a new world.

The 28 news for Ella and learners everywhere is that exploring new surroundings is hugely beneficial for memory. In a recent study, volunteers walked around a 29. Then, some of them walked around the same forest again, while others explored a 30 forest. And the second group 31 significantly better in memory tests later. According to the researchers, that was because exploring the 32 environment stimulated their brains for learning. So leaving home to 33 in a college makes perfect sense. What's more, 34 seem to gain most from being in strange surroundings. But we adults may also be able to 35 some of the benefits, according to the research.

第二节 (共10小题; 每小题1.5分, 满分15分)

阅读下面短文, 在空白处填入一个适当的单词或括号内单词的正确形式。

It's been several months since I arrived here and things 36 (change) so much in such a short period of time. When I first arrived, I was 37 (excite) and nervous to start a new adventure in a country I love. The first few days seemed so long ago. Now: trying to find a place 38 (live) in, organizing my timetable with the schools, and meeting new people.

After a few couple of weeks, however, the excitement started to fade and homesickness 39 (gradual) set in. It wasn't a powerful homesickness but enough to make me spend more than a few 40 (night) thinking about family back home, wondering 41 I should be there with them.

All that started to change after making some new friends and 42 (spend) good time with them, practicing languages, eating together and seeing new places as a group. I suppose we should never forget how important 43 is to have good people in our life because they can make such 44 difference.

Coming back here after visiting home for holiday felt like returning to a second home, to a place 45 was mine with people I cared about. Things got even busier and more people came into my life. New friends, Romance and a whole lot of good food flowed by.

If you are conducting businesses in foreign markets, it is necessary to know the customs and traditions of the locals when it comes to New Year's Day celebration. Let's find out how some European countries celebrate New Year's Day!

Spain

People in Spain have a unique way to celebrate New Year's Day. It is a custom to eat 12 grapes at midnight on New Year's Eve. If you are able to get all of them into your mouth, all of your wishes will come true in the coming year!

Denmark

People in Denmark celebrate New Year's Day by smashing unused plates and glasses against the doors of family and friends. This action is performed with the aim of warding off evil spirits. Some people even stand on chairs and jump off them. They think it will bring them good luck.

Greece

If you are offered a cake on New Year's Day in Greece, you may need tough teeth. Because you may get the piece with a coin. As January 1st is also Saint Basil's Day in Greece, you will have a full lucky year.

Ireland

People in Ireland also celebrate New Year's Day in a unique way. They have the custom of throwing bread at the walls as the clock approaches midnight, in order to scare away evil spirits and bring good luck in.

Germany

Scientists have developed DNA testing to help to keep track of animals that are hard to spot, including endangered animals.

A team of scientists in Denmark came up with the method. However, at the very beginning, they didn't have high hopes for the new method.

Every living thing has DNA that can be used to identify it. Therefore, scientists can use this DNA to tell what kinds of animals are in a certain place.

Testing for DNA isn't a new idea, but most of the time, scientists look for it in water. DNA experts try their best to collect extremely tiny bits of DNA onto very high quality filters.

In the laboratory, they got the DNA from the filters and made copies of it to compare with DNA from different animals. They identified 49 different kinds of animals. They even identified DNA from animals that live far from the area. As Dr. Elizabeth Clare, who led the team, said, "There's no other way I would detect DNA from a tiger, except for the Zoo's tiger."

The researchers are excited about the ways of this new method's using in the wild. Scientists have been looking for better ways to find where and how they live so that they can do a better job of protecting them.

6. What could the new method help scientists according to Paragraph 1?
A. To record animal types.
B. To identify rare animal species.
C. To count animal numbers.
D. To trace the hard-to-spot animals.
7. What was the Danish scientists' attitude to the new method before the experiment?
A. Neutral. B. Positive.

- C. Critical. D. Doubtful.
8. In which section of a magazine does this passage most likely appear?
- A. Health. B. Environment
C. Science. D. Geography.
9. In most cases, scientists look for DNA_____.
- A. from air B. in laboratory
C. from waste D. in water
10. Why did the scientists collect samples in the zoo?
- A. Because animals at the zoo were easily tested.
B. Because the zoo had samples not locally found.
C. Because they could easily get help in the zoo.
D. Because their laboratory was in the zoo.

Today lots of people love to wear T-shirts for the replacement (波浪线部分为后期人为增加的内容, 为了语句前后衔接地通顺, 原稿此处是缺失的, 下同) of a traditional dress shirt and tie. In most cases, people wear the right T-shirt under a sports coat.

The T-shirt did not look like the T-shirt we know today until after the First World War (1914- 1918). During World War 1, some soldiers were wearing old-fashioned woolen uniforms during the summer. Some American soldiers found that European soldiers' cotton undershirts(汗衫) were cooler and more comfortable. They started to wear the same kind. Because the design of the undershirts was simple and looked like the letter T, Americans called the clothes T-shirts. During the 1920s the word "T-shirt" was added to a dictionary.

By the Second World War, most soldiers wore cotton T-shirts as standard underwear. T-shirts were considered solely as underwear until the 1950s. In those days, even the word "underwear" was never mentioned in the upper social class. So in the 1950s, it was quite shocking to see movie stars such as Jean Arre and James Dean wearing just a T-shirt! That made this style "cool" for teenage males. But by 1955 it became socially acceptable for young men to wear just a T-shirt without a regular shirt covering it.

Today T-shirts become part of people's way of life. T-shirts can promote their favorite music band or sports team. People wear T-shirts advertising places that they have visited. T-shirts with images of cartoon characters are worn by children of all ages. In fact, you can find every cartoon character that ever graced the screen on a T-shirt somewhere.

11. During the First World War, soldiers found cotton undershirts_____ .
- A. durable B. acceptable
C. fashionable D. comfortable
12. How do people normally wear a T-shirt today?
- A. They wear it under a sports coat.
B. They wear it under a shirt.
C. They wear it under a dress.
D. They wear it under a uniform.
13. Which group of people was influenced by James Dean's T-shirt dressing style?
- A. Female musicians. B. Male stars.
C. Male teenagers. D. Sportswomen.
14. What can we know about people from the T-shirts they wear?
- A. Their preferences. B. Their families.
C. Their ages. D. Their destinations.

15. Before the 1950s, the upper class considered wearing just a T-shirt _____.

- A. formal B. normal
C. inappropriate D. isolated

When people go to the movies today, they can settle in to watch and listen to a story. But what if when the lights dimmed and the movie began, there was no dialogue, sound effects, or music? 16 Those silent films are important to film history.

When movie theaters showed silent films, a musician was often there to play live music along with the movie. 17 Occasionally, musicians or theater staff also produced sound effects, such as tires screeching or doors slamming. 18 Instead, the story was told through the performers' motions and through words shown on the screen.

When movies first included sound, audiences weren't sure what to think. Not everyone was excited about the new type of film, which became known as the “talkie.” 19 Clara Bow, who was a famous silent-movie actress in the early 1920s, was too nervous about her voice to become a star in the world of talking pictures. She disappeared from the spotlight and left show business altogether.

The first movie with sound. The Jazz Singer, was released in 1927. 20 After that, talking pictures became a huge success.

- A. That's what the first movies were like.
- B. It marked the beginning of a new era.
- C. However, there was no sound in the movie itself
- D. Music was chosen to fit the mood of the movie.
- E. Many silent film performers had trouble with the new format.
